Community of Practice Framework

A Template for Bioregional Flow Funding Groups

Purpose

A Community of Practice (CoP) is a shared learning environment — a circle of peers who come together around a common field of practice. Communities of Practice can take many forms. In the context of Flow Funding, a CoP serves as the connective field for those practicing Flow Funding together — including bioregional organizing groups, Flow Funders, and supporting partners. It's a space to learn from one another's experiences, deepen collective wisdom, and strengthen how resources move in service of life.

Kinship Earth offers this framework as a living template. Each community decides how it wants to gather, what agreements to hold, and how to evolve its own rhythm and structure over time.

Why a Community of Practice Matters

Flow Funding is relational. It depends on trust, learning, and continual reflection — not on rigid systems or hierarchy.

A Community of Practice ensures that:

- Learning flows both ways — from local to global and back again.
- Stories and insights are shared rather than siloed.
- Trust deepens between those practicing this model in different contexts.
- Programs evolve organically, through feedback and peer reflection, rather than from the top down.

Each CoP becomes a microcosm of the Flow Funding approach itself - participatory, and rooted in care.

Co-Creating Agreements

At the heart of every thriving Community of Practice are shared agreements — crafted together by the community, and revisited as relationships and needs evolve.

Below are examples drawn from the Agreements co-created by Kinship Earth's Flow Funders:

Example Agreements (Adapt, Expand, or Rewrite Together):

1. Trust and Transparency: We share openly about our processes, learnings, and challenges, knowing this builds mutual understanding and collective wisdom.
2. Reciprocity: We approach this space as both givers and receivers — each voice has value, and we uplift one another's contributions.
3. Non-Judgment: We listen with curiosity and compassion, not critique.
4. Confidentiality: What is shared in confidence stays within the circle unless consent is given to share it.
5. Integrity and Alignment: We each commit to practicing Flow Funding in ways that honor its values — relational, grounded, and life-affirming.
6. Collective Stewardship: We share responsibility for holding the space — from facilitation and note-taking to care and follow-up.
7. Adaptability: We remain open to evolution — allowing the structure and agreements to shift as the community grows.

Tip: Begin your first gathering by co-writing your agreements together. Read them aloud, and ensure everyone's voice is heard. These agreements become your shared compass.

Gathering Rhythm

There is no single “right” rhythm for a Community of Practice. The frequency, format, and facilitation should emerge from the community itself — shaped by the needs, capacities, and time zones of its members.

Below are examples to inspire your design:

- Monthly Circle: 60–90 minutes for check-ins, story-sharing, and peer reflection.
- Quarterly Deep Dive: Sessions focused on specific themes (e.g., cross-cultural giving, bioregional funding design, or storytelling for impact).
- Seasonal Reflection: Dedicated time to review learnings, celebrate milestones, and refine collective practices.
- Annual Gathering: Optional in-person or hybrid event for deeper connection and cross-pollination between bioregions.

Kinship Earth recommends starting simple — perhaps an onboarding call followed by quarterly calls — and letting the rhythm evolve naturally.

Holding the Space

Communities of Practice flourish when leadership is shared.

Common rotating roles include:

- Facilitator / Host: Guides the flow of conversation and ensures inclusivity.
- Story Keeper: Harvests insights and stories (with consent) for collective learning.
- Time Keeper / Guardian: Helps maintain flow and respect everyone’s contributions.

Shared practices might include:

- Opening with a grounding or check-in to reconnect with purpose.
- Using story circles to highlight the human and relational side of Flow Funding.

- Offering peer coaching in breakout groups for shared challenges.
 - Closing each session with a collective reflection or harvest.

Collective Learning & Program Evolution

Each CoP becomes a space to strengthen and evolve the Flow Funding model through real-time experience.

Communities are encouraged to:

- Reflect quarterly on what's working well or could be improved.
- Suggest updates to agreements, templates, or onboarding materials.
- Share stories of impact and lessons learned.
- Celebrate local adaptations that bring Flow Funding's spirit to life in unique ways.

⌚ In this way, every CoP becomes a living laboratory — refining the art of trust-based, bioregional philanthropy together.

Closing Reflections: Learning From Each Other

At the close of each season or cycle, we invite communities to answer the following questions inspired by Marion Rockefeller Weber, the pioneer of Flow Funding.

She asked her Flow Funders to reflect on four simple but profound questions at the end of their time together:

1. What inspired you?
2. What surprised you?
3. What challenged you?
4. What moved you?

These questions invite deeper self-awareness, empathy, and collective learning. They help us not only see the impact of our giving, but also how the practice of Flow Funding transforms us.

⌚ When shared in community, these reflections become one of the most powerful ways we learn from one another — illuminating the many ways trust, generosity, and kinship flow through our work.

Closing Note

A Community of Practice is not a meeting — it is a living ecosystem.

It grows when nurtured with curiosity, presence, and care.

Through shared reflection and collective evolution, we cultivate a culture of learning that mirrors the essence of Flow Funding itself:

trust, participation, and the continual flow of generosity in service to life.
